

Colin Seals
Director
Public Sector Consultant

Sustainability and opportunity—two words that inspire Colin Seals. Colin gets a charge out of helping people, businesses, and governments participate in public policy in a way that benefits both our environment and our economy.

Colin is a director at Public Sector Consultants, where he guides strategy, research, and analysis related to local, state, and national energy policy. He helps clients identify opportunities and overcome challenges around traditional and renewable power generation, grid modernization, sustainable mining, and EV supply chains. Colin is passionate about work that helps Michigan residents and companies be full participants in the clean energy transition.

Before working at Public Sector Consultants, Colin served as an economic affairs officer with the U.S. Department of State, where he advised ambassadors and senior U.S. officials on energy, innovation, telecommunications, and health policy. His foreign postings included Canada, Mexico, and Chile. Before working in government, Colin was a lawyer in Chicago.
